In a world where trends change as drastically as day and night, it is nice to know that some things will always remain Extraordinarily Simple. SJND is a shining example of this dwindling tradition. Some students may disagree as they find the curriculum to be more difficult than they expected this year. Education, community work, and a family-like atmosphere are the simple ideas that work together, preparing us for the world outside. Over and over again St. Joe's proves that basic and simple is better than showy and complicated. From our simple dress codes to our high academic standings, SJND reigns supreme. Even though at any moment lime green, polyester, bell bottoms, and butterfly collars may become all the rage, we will always be a place where Extraordinarily Simple tastes remain.

• Simply studying after school, these students are socializing while keeping up with their studies, the classic example of balancing work and play.

We believe in achieving excellence. Every day is a constant struggle to reach the top. We are committed to being the best we can be, taking the advantage, and enriching the lives of others. We are future politicians, athletes, and engineers, with virtually nothing impeding our goals. With the future in our hands, we are slowly transforming our ideas into reality. Using our given talents while developing new ones, we put everything into making something special. It took long nights of study, hours of preparation, and grit and determination. Failure meant a chance for later improvement. Success only contributed to a yearning for more. Yet in the end, we made it a year that was Simply Extraordinaire.

●Frosh Kelly Cuellar and Junior Dale Taylor give a helping hand to Sophomore Amanda Snider in Notre Dame Hall during the busy lunch. Last minute homework has been seen a lot by teachers this year, but they accept it because they know it is coming from extraordinary students who are involved with many activities and who often do not have time to do that last Geometry problem.

Dancing Fiends

When the sun set, SJND students danced the nights away. All night long, dance go-ers showed off all their new trends and moves. The Back to School Dance kicked off the social scene with a bang. Sophomore Lynn Litarowsky added, "It was a good introduction to what all the future dances would be like."

At the Frosh Mixer, the Class of '96 was in a fierce volleyball competition between homerooms. Throughout the night, the freshmen formed what would become a united class. "It was really fun," exclaimed Natalie Sawa. "There was never a dull moment!" New friendships were also made. "It was wonderful! I met people I had never seen around school before," commented Desiree Marr.

The Halloween Dance began for many the Halloween activities planned for the weekend. Although not all students dressed up as trick-o-treaters, they definitely thought the evening was a treat.

The Christmas spirit was manifested in to the Christmas Pageant and the annual Winter Ball. Decked in glamorous gowns and tuxedos, students showed off just how much they were enjoying the spirit of the holidays.

The two divisional dances were the highlights of the sophomore and junior/senior year. The Soph Hop showed just how lively their class was. The Junior/Senior Prom on the other hand was unmistakably the ritziest dance of the year. Gorgeously garbed, the Jrs. & Srs. made it a most unforgettable dance.

Ending the year came the annual Luau. United they stood, SJND students showed how much fun they could have at dances. These dances really made some of the most special moments of high school life.

●Juniors George Fincher and Heather Hewitt are caught in the moment, jamming to the bass at the Back-to-School Dance.

●Frosh enjoy the lap sit game after mixing in the Quad area. The Frosh Mixer was a huge success, with almost the entire class in attendance.

●Seniors Joe Nelson and Juan Ramos are engaged in a fierce arm-wrestling match. Joe was less than an inch from victory.

aste of America

Ice cream, get your homemade ice cream! Sir, would you like to taste some of this blue ribbon apple pie?"

Echoing nostalgia, food, fun, and even a little bit of competition, the 2nd Junior Americana Fair rolled into the SJND Quad in September. Hosted by the Junior English classes and their teachers, it recreated the hustle and bustle of the old county fairs of the past. For Freshman, it was one of the first activities allowing them to interact with the rest of the school. Frosh Kelly Lack said "It was fun and it gave me a chance to meet others." For others, it was something totally new. "It was the first American-type fair I went to and it gave me a better understanding of the culture and activities of the U.S.," added Junior Jason Loh.

Starting early in the morning, the "newly baptized, full fledged American" juniors began pouring into school bringing family baked goods, animals, and smiles.

Upon the arrival of the Marine Color Guard and the completion of the official opening ceremonies, the fair jumped to a start. Pies of various fruits and meats, along with banana bread entries were sliced and distributed to the eager, salivating crowd. "It was scrumptious!" explained Senior Monica Idzkowska on her sample of pie. Red, white, and blue tinted ice cream, courtesy of the Honors Chemistry Class, was quickly allotted.

Arm wrestling was popular, as was the cake-walk. Said Senior Stephanie DeLeon, "I won some cake and it was really good!"

Just as soon as it had begun, the fair quickly ended, leaving the school in anticipation for its return.

Shop Frenzy

This or that?" Shopping is a lot like school: decisions, decisions... The simple solution: buy what you need, not what you want.

To some people, shopping is a "religion" of its own. Some of the places which people "worship" include Bayfair, Southland, Valley Fair, New Park, Stoneridge, Hilltop, and South Shore. Deciding which one to go to is a decision all together. There are a lot of things to think about before selecting one, "Do I have enough gas to get there? Is it worth it? Who's going to be there? Am I going to buy anything?" After a person has answered these questions, they go with their answer. Out of all the malls all over the Bay Area, "Stoneridge is my favorite mall," stated Junior Danielle Richardson. Senior Thomas Germain said, "I think that Southland is better than Bay Fair." While Junior Fernando Mendoza added, "Southland is my favorite mall (too)."

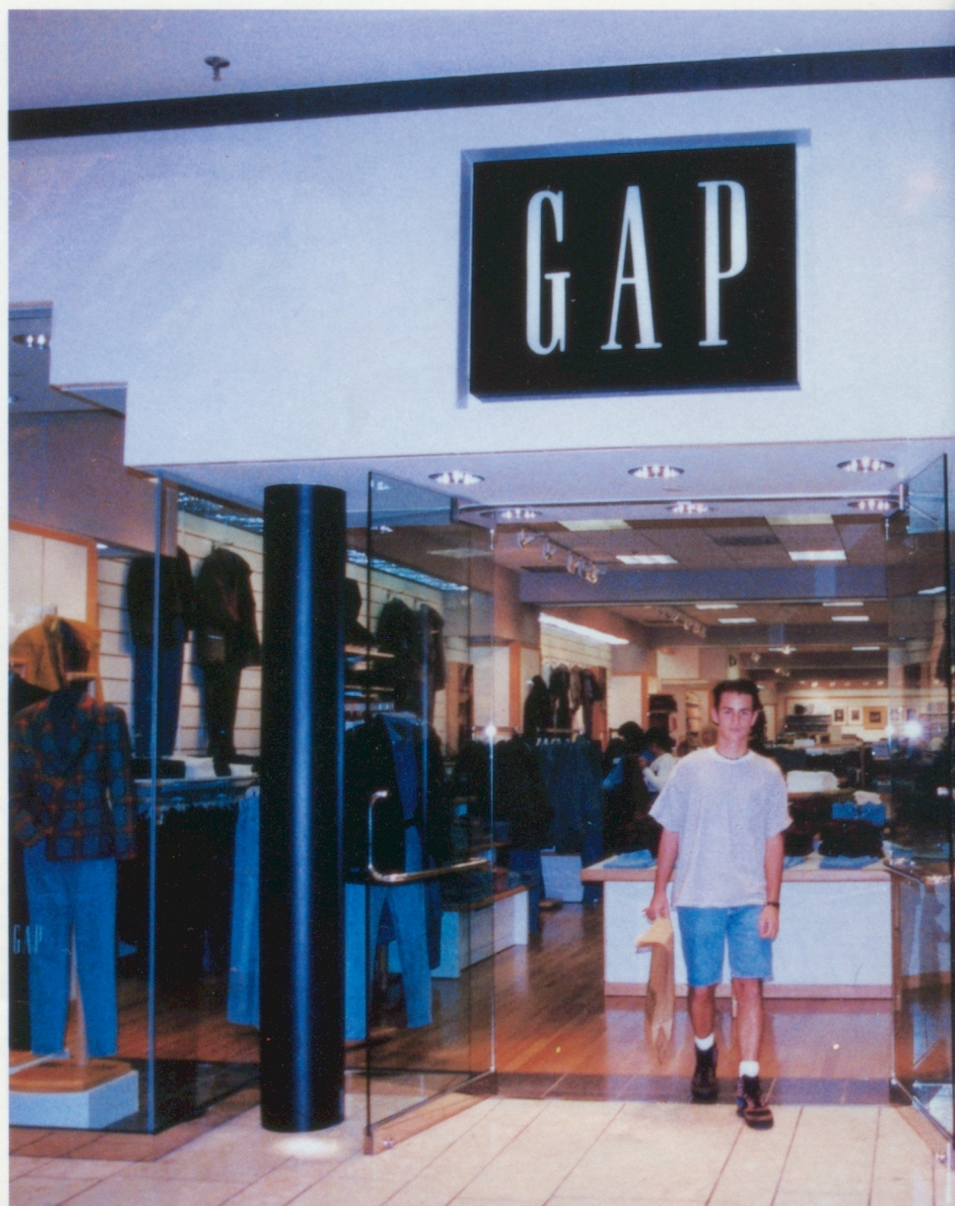

Some people consider shopping a right, others consider it a privilege, "I shop whenever I have money, which isn't often!" exclaimed Sophomore Michelle Pardo.

Shopping means different things to different people. "Shopping can be a way to relieve stress," stated ASB President Senior Cristina Lorenzo. What everyone does agree on is the fact that shopping is an endless battle, in which people long to be the first to do, or buy something and set a trend.

People constantly look for deals on anything and everything they can get their hands on. Material possessions may please you now, and you may still be able to keep buying more, and more, but the bottom line is that money can't buy you love.

•With its colorful assortment of merchandise, the Limited is a popular clothing store. Stoneridge Mall also houses Limited Too.

●Exhausted from a long shopping day, Senior Ermin Mistica takes the opportunity to see stores from the mannequins' viewpoint.

●Senior Cathy Gacad browses through the exquisitely sumptuous selection of under-garmnets in Victoria's Secret.

Stress Burnout

• "I have a headache this big and it has stress written all over it!" exclaims a worried Sophomore Charisse Lacuesta.

Equipped with a bag of potato chips and a can of Diet Pepsi, SJND students struggled with the long hours at night, either cramming for tests, writing perfect compositions, or just coping with the load of everyday homework.

One would think that all this stress would drive a person crazy, right? Wrong! Most people were pushed to the limit with hectic schedules due to jobs, responsibilities at home, and extracurricular activities for school. Plus, taking honors courses did not make life any easier.

Stress, as we all know, is an impediment in everyone's life. It just never seems to go away. But the more the subject is pursued, the more light will be shed on the matter.

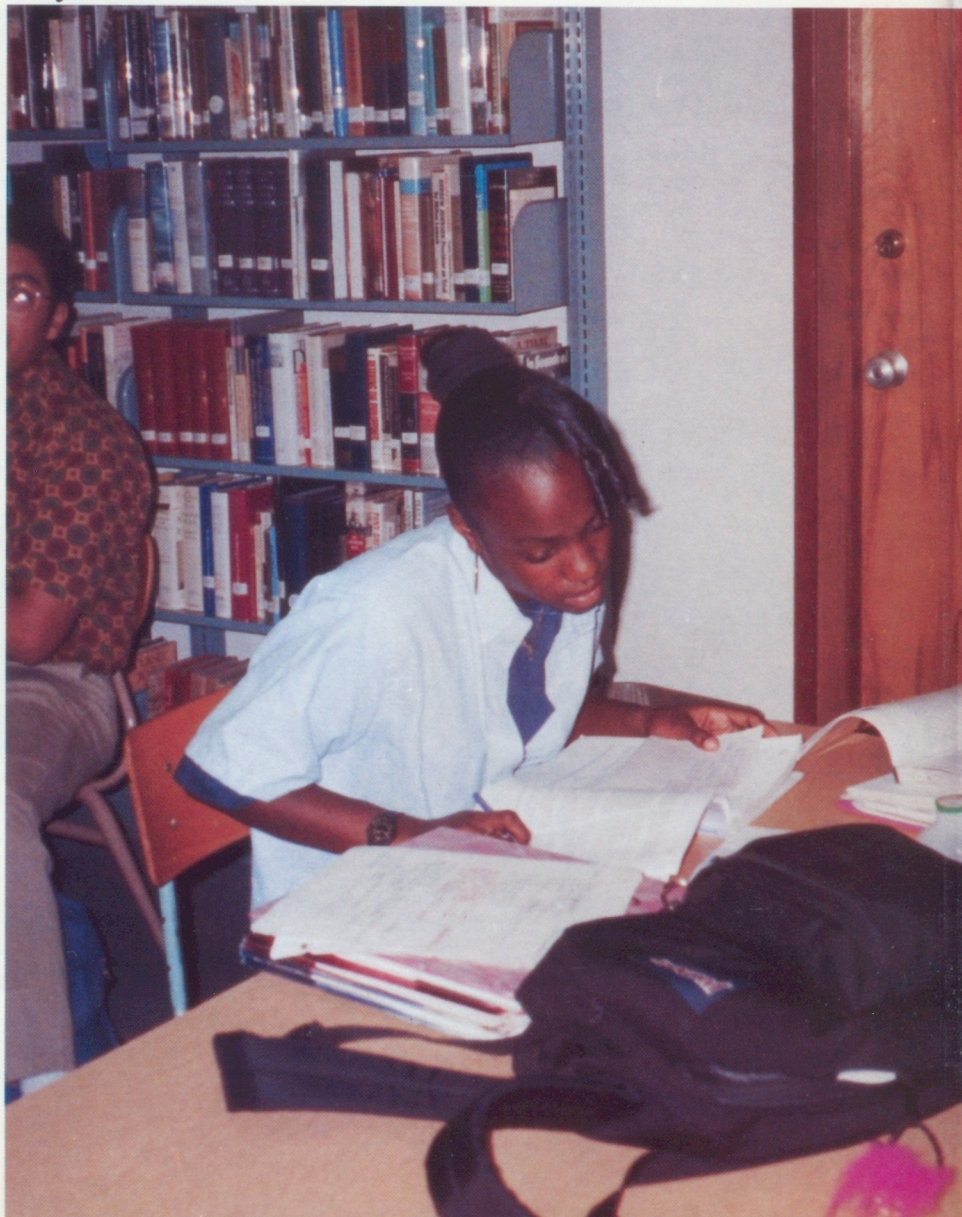

As Sophomore Charisse Lacuesta explained, "This year was harder than last year. Having honors courses created more stress than I could have ever imagined."

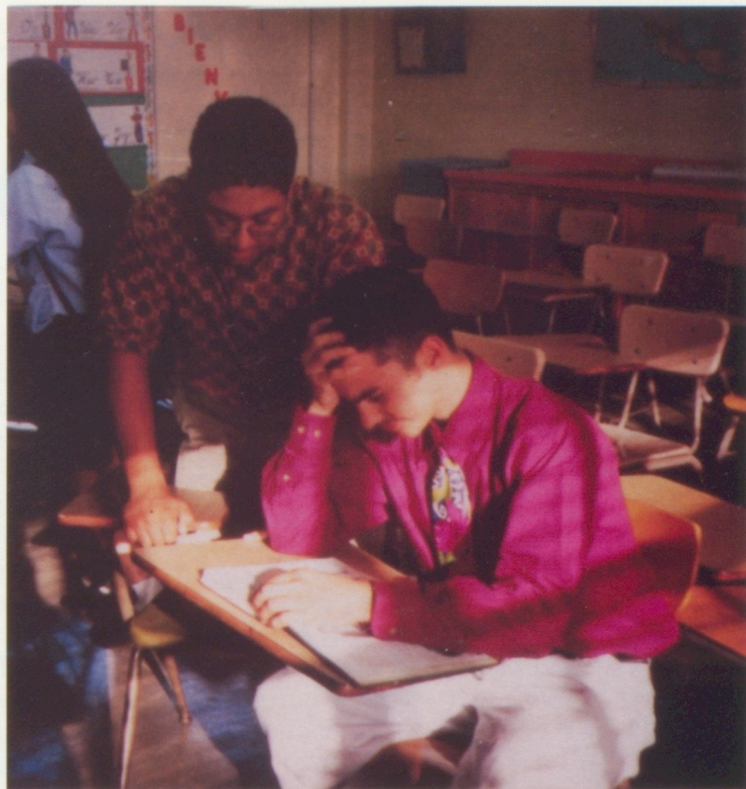

Some people, though, became baffled because of stress, like Junior Angie Dean. "I start getting frustrated over little problems and think that even a little bit of work is a lot," she declared.

Luckily, there were various ways to manifest stress. One way was to gorge on junk food to keep the mind off work or to keep awake long enough to finish the work.

But there were healthier ways to relieve stress. Some students aerobicized, cycled, jogged, or took brisk walks to relieve stress. Still, relaxing on the couch with the remote control in hand was the most popular stress reliever of all.

Whatever the case was, SJND students made sure that pressure did not get the best of them and were able to achieve an extraordinarily successful year at school.

● "AAAAAAHH!!!!" A stressed Sophomore Noreen Dizon decides to release all her tension simply by screaming to calm her nerves

● The library is the perfect place to finish up homework as Sophs Akilah Tanner and Karina Parajon demonstrate.

● Soph Michelle Pardo freaks out as she and fellow Soph Lisa Gurmon experience the wrath of Mr. Hooke in 6th period religion.

●Senior Adina Warner proves that weekends are a time to let your hair down, as she shows with her Cousin It impression.

●"On weekends, I like to go out with my friends," says Senior Monica Ramos as she hangs with Emily Dierkha, Traci Chew, Ermin Mistica, and Monika Idzkowska.

●Sitting pretty next to a scenic waterfall after an elegant occasion are Sophomores Cuidy Corona and Cornelia Baranyi.

n the loose

Weekends are a time for rest, play, and fun. "It's a time to be with your friends as much as possible before Sunday night. Sunday night is always reserved for homework," explains Senior Monica Ramos.

But some people have Alexander Graham Bell to thank for their weekend activities. People like Rosemary Tores demonstrate this when she said, "I talk on the phone, then I go to sleep, then I talk on the phone again."

But some of people lack the ebullience that most have for the weekend. When asked the question, "What do you do on the weekend?", Soph Cornelia Baranyi simply said, "Sleep."

Getting prepared for the coming week can be conceived as a purpose for the weekend. "I think it's really good to have some time to rest and gain energy for the week to come," says Soph

Erin Callaghan.

Others have different views on what the weekends mean to them. Teacher Ronald Travers philosophizes, "I do not live for weekends. I mean I'm glad I have my weekends, but I don't live for them."

Still there are some people who play sports and actually do enjoy exercise. "I play basketball and I go swimming a lot," says Frosh Michael Muse.

"I do my Christian Service Hours," utters Junior Miechia Jones. Yes, unfortunately some Pilots do have to work, either voluntarily or to help pay the bills.

Even though some cannot wait for the weekend to be over to get back to school and friends, the feeling for most students and teachers at 2:41 at the end of the week is, "Thank God it's Friday!!"

●Senior Sara Sund shows that concrete ducks are the newest fad in lawn decorations for Harbor Bay houses.

At your service

•Freshmen Michael Bremond and Brandy Walker show service within their own SJND community by studying together.

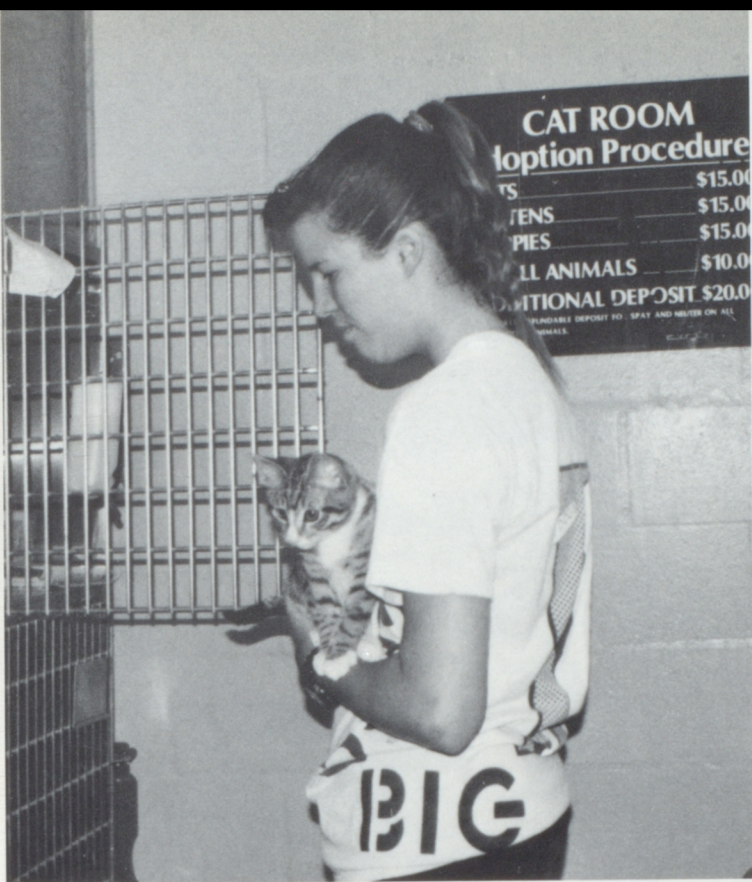

For a typical SJND student, community service or the christian service program was more than just a requirement. Students volunteered at various places to help in any possible way they could. This program made the students aware of their responsibility to serve the community. It also gave them time to associate with the environment that they were not that familiar with. One objective of CSP was for each individual student to develop their talents and become a more well-rounded person.

When asked how the Christian Service Program has helped her become a better person, Junior Catherine Magno responded, "It has helped me interact with other people who needed me. It's also made me more independent and stand for what I believe is just." Community service has definitely made it possible for students to get involved with the community. Freshman Yvette Abellar stated that it gave her the chance to work with people and help pay back society.

Whether students volunteered at the hospital, a homeless shelter, a park district, or daycare, it has all enabled them to grow and become a more socially involved individual. Participating with the community gave each student time to think about the injustices in the world and what they could do to lessen them. Sophomore John Squires best described this program as "a time to give ourselves to those who need us."

●Seniors Ray Albiento and Cristina Lorenzo, part of the Miller's Outpost team, work on a display for the latest styles of jeans.

●Paper or plastic? Here, Lucky's employee Senior Cecilia Toscano bags a customer's groceries in a quick and efficient manner.

Getting a job

Working was a part of life for many students and teenagers this year. During these times when the economy was struggling to recover from the recession, jobs were becoming more and more scarce, and teenagers were vying for these positions.

Students from every division worked, but it was most evident in the Senior class. When asked why she worked, Stephanie DeLeon responded, "There are a lot of expenses that Seniors have to pay for this year including Senior portraits, announcements, Grad Nite, prom, and other miscellaneous stuff." She also said that on her job, she learned more about retail and sales. Erika Perez emphasized, "I worked because during these tough times, it was really hard to come up with extra cash." Erika, who worked at the Piedmont Gardens convalescent home, added that it was a worthwhile experience, demanding patience and understanding. Ray Albiento, another Senior, worked at McGee's and Miller's Outpost. A portion of his salary went toward paying his tuition, showing not only the importance of his work, but responsibility on his part. He pointed out, "It was a good experience because it taught me to organize my schedule, but there also was a limit to what I could do and still have some free time." Junior Cathy Magno said that her job at Tweed's helped to keep her busy and gave her the opportunity to strengthen her communication skills. Senior Cindy Finnel added that "I really appreciated the value of an education, after all the skills I utilized on the job. After a while, school started seeming more fun than my job."

Incredible Spirit

•This group of Sophomores proudly announce their "nerdhood" to the entire school during their skit and say, "It's OK to be smart."

Who rocks the house? Pilots rock the house! Spirit Week 1992 was no ordinary week. This year was the only year in which the four divisions had no tying theme, but did that bother anyone?

Sophomore Svetlana Lee said, "There might have been more unity if there was an overall theme, but it turned out pretty well." Senior Cathy Gacad added, "There were a few quirks and some bad things but altogether, it went well."

The largest Freshman class in SJND's history gave the school their wonderful interpretations of the Holidays. Their skit showed creativity and participation of the entire class. Two Frosh guys dressed up as girls and two females, Bardie Goodie and Rina Jarin, dressed up as guys, displaying their understanding and affection for each other on Valentine's Day.

The Sophomores said, "Lights! Cameras! Action!" and presented the World of Movies. Show posters decorated their section of Marianist Hall. They performed a skit of parodies that brought smiles and tears to some eyes, and included "Mr. X&√ Meets Jason," Mr. Hooke and a segment of Wayne's World.

The Junior class clicked the "ON" button of their gigantic remote control and presented the most imaginative and outstanding parade that SJND has seen in years. It featured the Flintstones, The Brady Bunch, Soul Train, Married With Children, The Young and the Restless, and the infamous Energizer Bunny. With TV's set up live to broadcast the Arsenio Hall

Show, the other divisions could see all 18 minutes of the skit on the monitors.

The Seniors went back in the past, exploring the Stone Age, the Prohibition Era, and the far-out 60's and 70's. Their skit showed the metamorphosis of Michael Jackson, and included a reenactment of Bob Dylan's National Anthem performance at Woodstock. The Senior Cave was skillfully constructed, and luckily it was judged before it "caved in" thanks to members of the lower divisions. (cont.)

●Last minute preparations were common with all of the classes. Here, Juniors touch up decorations before the week begins.

●The Seniors salute the Freshmen during their Holiday Parade as the Frosh present the Flags during the Independence Day celebrations.

●The Juniors present their parade of Television Stars on the second day of Spirit Week, with Claudia Briones and Jason Loh leading.

●Going my way? Games like the Amoeba contest bring students of all divisions together, as this group demonstrates.

●Sophomores display their support for their classmates participating in the relay game.

●JR Valrey blows his own horn during a Pep Band performance, bringing music into the Spirit Week activities.

●Students try to pop each others' balloons while trying to stay in the circle and not letting their own balloons become a victim of another's shoe.

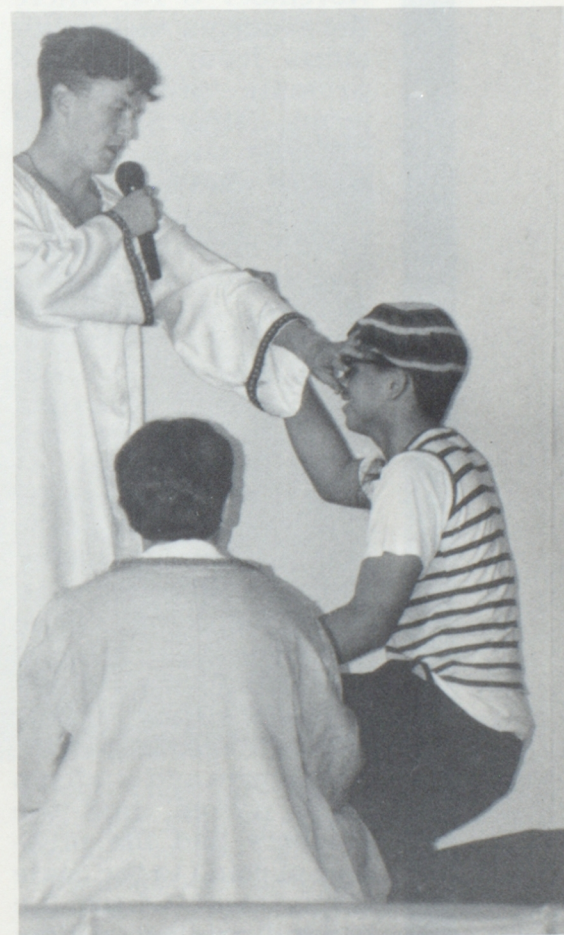

What a Week

●Unity Day features the Pilot cheerleaders performing a dance to "Shake That Body" to liven up the gym.

Games were an integral part of Spirit Week. Games like Balloon Stomp and the Crab Walk, in addition to the constant screaming and shouting, were enough to drain one's energy. But, surprisingly enough, each and every day of Spirit Week Pilots returned to the gym with fully recharged vocal chords ready to belt out the latest cheer, and a new source of energy to participate in the fullest capacity.

In the end, the real winners were all the students, for had it been just one class putting forth all the effort Spirit Week would not have been the great success it was. Although the Seniors proudly took the title of Spirit Week champs, they truly were good sports and knew exactly what the week was all about. In the end, Senior Kirk Valencia invited all divisions to take part in the Seniors' celebrations and stressed the point of "friendly competition."

●Jesus? Lord? Our Savior? No, it's Senior Chris Branson healing a blind Freddy Lumpian during the 1st place skit.

Invading D.C.

•Sophs Alicia Dlugosh and Erica Anthony, and Seniors Sara Sund and Adina Warner seem to be enjoying the banquet.

This year's Close Up trip was a very educational and informative venture for all the students who participated. Along with Mr. Travers, who was the advisor/chaperone on the trip, were Seniors Geraldine Toribio, Missy Case, Amber Biles, Adina Warner, and Sara Sund, and Sophomores Erica Anthony, Alicia Dlugosh, Floyd VitoCruz and Carl Valderama.

They took the trip on November 8-14, where the students met politicians from past and present presidential terms. Senior Sara Sund told how she and Adina Warner were in the Capital and went to Senator Dianne Fienstein's office. "I was so nervous to ask if she was in and I got tongued-tied. I just stood there like an idiot and kinda grunted. Adina had to talk for me," she said.

The group also attended seminars, which gave them insight into the political process. Amber Biles commented that, "the whole political thing is not as difficult as it seems, but it is very complicated because the government is so big."

Teachers and students often parted, and the teachers had the privilege of going to the State Department where the general public is seldom let in. The students got to see major points of interest like the Capital, the Washington Monument, the Jefferson Memorial, and the Gettysburg Battlefield.

Most agreed that the most memorable experience was, "getting to meet people who knew what was right and wrong with this nation and how we could improve it," commented Carl Valderama. Not only was the trip a chance to get out of school for a week, it was an experience that will stick with these individuals for many years to come.

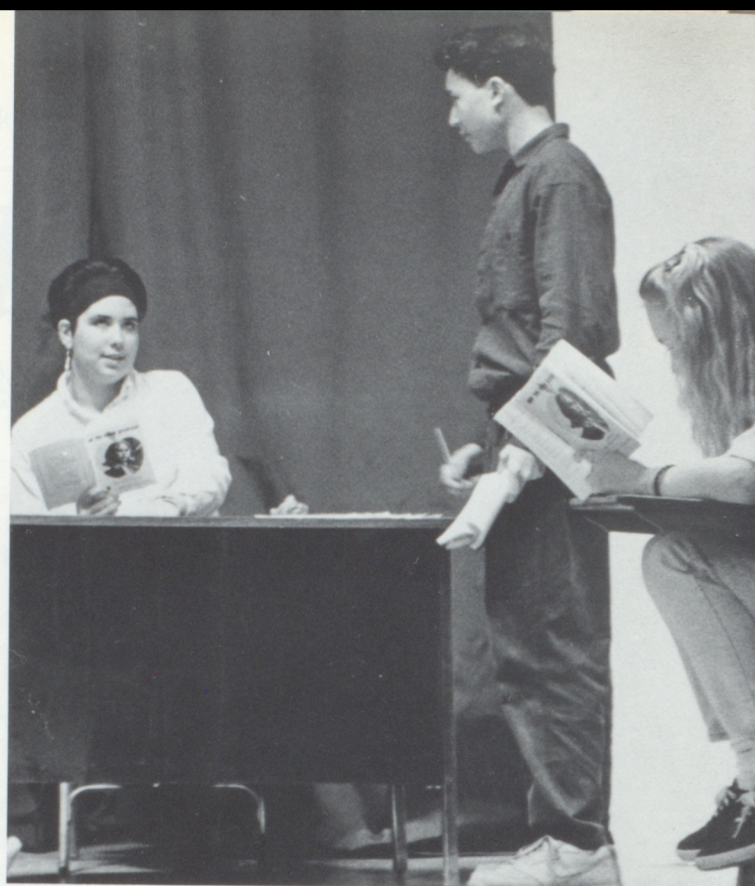

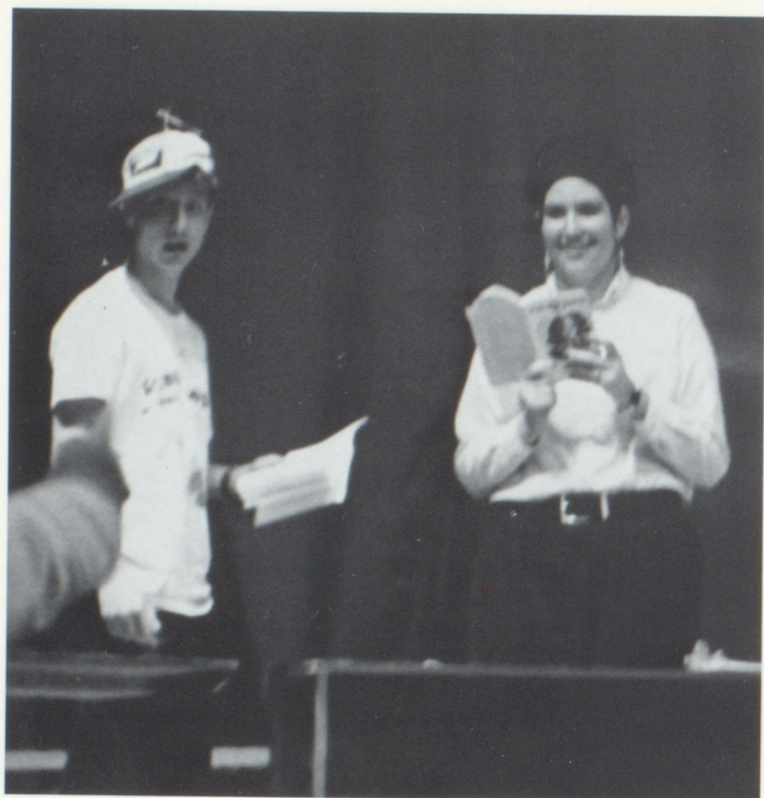

● Erica Anthony and Missy Case stand in front of the statue of Junipero Serra, California's statue.

● 1992 Close Up: Geraldine Toribio, Alicia Dlugosh, Amber Biles, Adina Warner, Erica Anthony, Sara Sund, Missy Case, Mr. Travers, (bottom) Carl Valderama, and Floyd VitoCruz

● Missy Case and Amber Biles take a quick shot in the field of the Battle of Gettysburg before boarding the bus.

● "I hate it when my hair gets rained on!" exclaims Amber Biles with Adina Warner and Sara Sund. Just like many politicians, these three are all wet in Washington.

●The cast looks dumbfounded as they find out that they do not know what they are doing. Mr. Hooke reluctantly re-directs them.
 ●"Do it again," says Mr. Hooke, the greatest director in the world. Dale Taylor, unlike Susan Harris, would rather not do the scene over.

●"You have to sign my book clearance," says John Squires (Charles Aarons) to Susan Harris (Sylvia Barret) during play rehearsal.

Before the rage of the Chili Peppers and before rap took its place there were...

Bellbottoms!!!

If you had no idea what public school was like in 1969 then obviously you didn't catch the spring play "Up the Down Staircase," directed and produced by the gifted Michael Hooke and assisted by the dashing Martha Carpenter. It portrayed a young, naive school teacher, Sylvia Barret (Susan Harris), coming to a New York high school that is less than perfect. Kids dropping out left and right! Teachers that didn't give a damn! And worst of all, they didn't have enough copies of Ivanhoe!!! Nevertheless, it was a comedy with some great lines and compelling characters.

• Clubs were the largest source of extracurricular activity besides sports. They provided an outlet for students to expand their various interests, from Campus Ministry to the International Club. Social Justice member Monica Ramos helps decorate a box for Project Kris Kringle.

• Sophomore Allen Choi does his share of decorating the offertory box. Allen took part in most of the Social Justice activities and said, "Peace Day was especially productive because it made people aware of their surroundings."

• Collecting a basketful of Kris Kringle participant papers, Sophomore Jenny Craig makes her contribution to the club's most successful activity.

Because the earth cannot help itself, Social Justice is lending a hand

Social Justice is an organization that helps restore what has been lost in the community. From running the successful and popular Kris Kringle gift program to beach clean-ups, the Social Justice team is always on the lookout to make an improvement in the world.

The biggest project the club had this year was the annual Kris Kringle. SJND students played Santa for an elementary school in Oakland this Christmas season. The student body gave the children something that will always remain in their hearts: a sense of joy and love during the Christmas time.

"It felt good to help others, especially little kids that are less fortunate than I am. This project really captured the true spirit of Christmas," commented Sophomore JoAnn Crisostomo. Many had that warm fuzzy feeling as they were buying and wrapping gifts for their assigned child. "Just knowing that a little girl is going to get what she always wanted from me makes me just as happy as she is," replied Senior Stephanie deLeon, who was one of the many students that had that warm fuzzy feeling.

Social Justice also directed the "People are Hungry in March, Too" can food drive. Collecting hundreds of can foods, they made it possible for many homeless people to have some food in their empty stomachs. "We realized that the homeless people are not only hungry during the holiday season, when organizations host a can/dried food drive. Rather, year round they are in search of food, especially in the winter months when the weather is harsh and when no other can food drive assists them," explained Ms. Carpenter, one of the club's moderators.

Other tasks the club undertook in the past year were cleaning up Crown Memorial Beach in Alameda, responding to natural disasters, such as earthquakes and fires, and organizing a day of fasting to show social awareness.

From Kris Kringle to Peace Day, from helping people to helping the earth, the Social Justice Club made a big and unforgettable mark in the community.

Campus Ministry is not just about Jesus or God, it's about faith in the individual

What a difference a year makes! With the start of a new school year the student body initiated a new priest, Father Rich Danyluk, and the change had been apparent from the beginning. "Last year the masses were rather boring, but this year it's really cool!" exclaimed Junior Susan Harris. Father Rich claimed, "I'm not really looking to make mass 'cool', but to have it reach you on your level, to touch you on your level."

The real difference from last year was the lack of Campus Ministry. Father Rich explained, "I didn't want to have a true Campus Ministry club during the first semester because I wanted to see how it had been done in the past and see if it was meeting the needs of the student body." The true point behind Campus Ministry was to help unify students by planning retreats and masses. "It is much like Spirit Week," said Father Rich, "how all the classes were cheering for each other."

Father saw Campus Ministry from a different view, "It shouldn't be a club of twenty to thirty students planning masses and retreats for everyone. It should be the whole student body participating in planning the events." The Social Justice club planned most of the Mass of the Immaculate Conception and the Christmas mass was planned by the African-American Student Council.

Retreats this year also experienced a dramatic change, for they were really enthralling and focused on the issues that the student body thought were important, not just the ones some of the teachers wanted to talk about. Mr. Travers said that Father Rich "really did an excellent job on the Faculty Retreat and made it interesting, much unlike past retreats."

The unifying bonds between students were obvious and hopefully those bonds grow stronger over the years to remind all that the student body is a whole, and never to be divided. It can be seen that Campus Ministry was actually the entire student body working together. And as its motto goes, "It doesn't matter where you go or what you do or how much you have. What matters is who you have beside you."

• Senior ASB President Cristina Lorenzo shows an unusual amount of enthusiasm while dismissing the divisions from mass.

• "I can't believe she actually said, 'Yes!'" During the Mass of the Immaculate Conception Senior Michelle Baustista recites the homily, explaining Mary's acceptance of bearing the Lord's Child.

● A white version of Boyz to Men? Probably not. Seniors Ethan Prouhet, DJ Oster, and Joe Nelson experience the joy that music can bring to a person. The more serious singers are sitting in the background, like Makiba Valrey, Alicia Terrazas, and Aldo Osornio.

● Social Justice Committee members Dale Taylor and Susan Harris deliver a prayer of their own to the student body during the Mass of the Immaculate Conception.

● Donned with a Santa hat and a teddy bear, Senior Genevieve Reyes recites the Magnificat at the Christmas Mass.

A great book should leave you with many experiences and slightly exhausted at the end. You live several lives while reading it."

-William Styron

From the life of a soccer player to that of a Social Justice member, the 92-93 Reflections Yearbook staff made every effort to fit the entire year into 184 pages of memorable moments. Their work on the book began even before the school year opened. Editor Marc Gallagher and Assistant Editors Joe and Jim Pan attended a yearbook seminar at Northstar-at-Tahoe, bringing back valuable information to share with the rest of the staff so that they could produce an award-winning yearbook.

With the aid of lectures and videos, new staff members learned the basics of yearbook publishing from picas to computer programs. Newcomer John Squires said, "I came in with the idea that it would be a lot of fun. It ended up being that, plus over 100 hours of long, hard work."

Many changes took place in the yearbook staff, most notably the acquisition of a new room in Marianist Hall. This room was certainly much bigger than the small half of Ms. Micheli's room, and was much more accessible for the staff. "I liked the new room 10 times better than last year's, not only because it was larger, but because we could stay late and come in over the weekend without a big hassle," commented Erika Perez.

All was not bliss, however, for the staff experienced excruciatingly painful deadlines, which almost were never met. "I think the problem was that we tried to do too much. This was the first year going totally digital, and it was too big of a change for the whole staff to deal with," explained Editor

Marc Gallagher. Only a few people knew how to work the computers, so the deadlines usually fell on their shoulders.

What was the reward for these tired, dedicated individuals? The reward was a book well made, and hopefully awards of excellence will pay them back, but these Simply Extraordinary people would do it all over again (well, most of them at least).

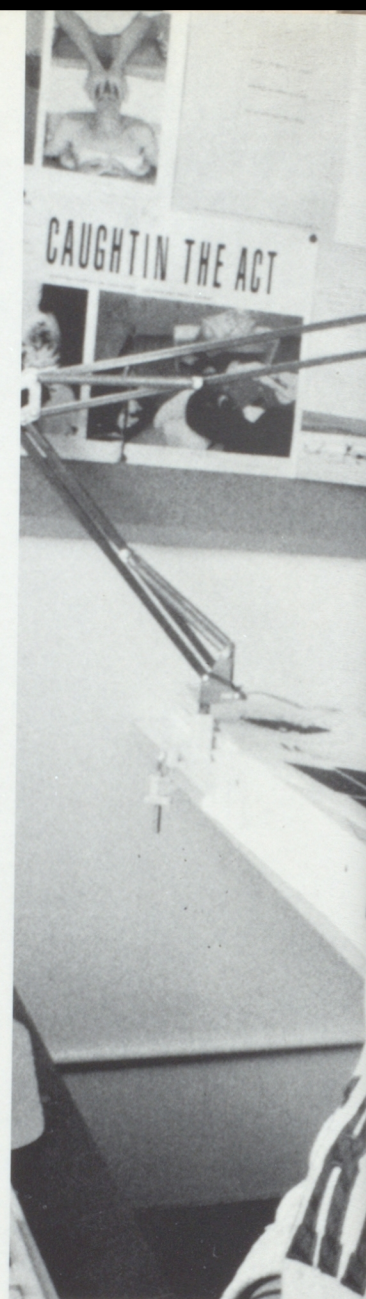

• Second-year staffer Dana Herrera enters her Division spread into the computer. This is the first year the entire book has been done on computer, and it has come with many glitches and problems to be worked out.

• At the Sierra Yearbook Seminar, Editor Marc Gallagher, Assistant Editors Jim and Joe Pan, and Advisor Brother Brian Guerrini capture the winning spirit at Northstar.

Imagination is the key to success, along with creativity

• Svetlana Lee and Charisse Lacuesta laugh at Aimee Abellar's caption idea as Jim Pan tries to show them the new versatile grid column method of designing year-book spreads.

• Cristina Lorenzo looks in awe at the amazing things a computer can do. Cristina, a second-year staffer, thought that the traditional method of layouts (on Quad-Paks) were much easier.

• Editor Marc Gallagher and Photo Editor Vicky Schleppe look over the Senior Baby pictures, a feature of this year's book that was absent in last year's.

• "John! Please help! I do not know what I am doing!" cries Sophomore Danielle Booth. Yes, the Computer Era has struck the Yearbook staff hard this year, being a source of headaches, stress attacks, and frustrations for all members. John Squires simply chuckles at Danielle, showing his ability to laugh about the agony of others.

39

• This is what a Publications room should look like! Calvin Klein, Guess, Gap, and Banana Republic ads grace the walls of the Yearbook room, which provides creative inspiration to the staff.

• Business Manager Cathy Gacad totals up the 1992-1993 budget for the yearbook production, which came to be in excess of $20,000. Fundraisers, ads, and yearbook sales all help to pay for these costs.

• Did somebody die in here or something? Why all the long faces? Obviously a deadline must be approaching, for why else would staff members of the Kaleidoscope newspaper look so sad? Deadlines were a problem with the newspaper, for it was a club that met after school on Tuesdays and Thursdays, a time when many members had other obligations to fulfill.

window to imagine

O.K., so here I am. It's 2:45 & I'm in Mrs. Norris' room for another Prisms meeting. As usual, Herman Gee, our faithful editor, is leading the meeting & he's reading off his little notebook of ideas. There are so many things to decide: What's the theme of this year's literary magazine? Which of the fifty creative entries will be published? How much will it cost?- the decisions are endless.

Well, we're perusing over the many entries- about forty works in English, ten or fifteen in Spanish, and some art. This is truly the best way for students to express their creative and artistic qualities. Although all entries are great, only a fraction can be published.

Oh look! There's Sophomore Patricia Lim. This is her first year on Prisms. She designed the cover of last year's magazine and this year's contest brochure. She thinks Prisms is a good way for talented artists to show what they can do.

Now, it's Thursday and I'm at a Kaleidoscope meeting in the Publications room. There's Mr. Grant and Herman Gee conducting the meeting. Herman, again, is reading off his little notebook of ideas. We're thinking of possible articles for the next publication. Sophomore Allen Choi enjoys being on the newspaper staff.

He can practice his writing skills in his articles.

Staff members work together to learn all the new things. We got new computers this year, so there are new changes. All members work together to publish a wonderful work of art.

• Seniors Angie Capra and Alicia Terrazas work the recruitment booth for Prisms. Although the staff was not that large this year, it was made up of dedicated, hard working students.

Diversifying the students' interests, clubs are making us aware...

There were many clubs at SJND, each having a different purpose to serve a different group of people on campus. Anyone could join them as long as the people had the time and the dedication. Each club gave something back to the community, school, or individual, but each invited the entire school community to get involved.

Traditionally, the International Club catered to those students who were interested in learning about other cultures, and while this is still true, the definition of the International Club had greatly expanded. "I think that the International Club was a valuable part of St. Joe's in that they made other students realize that their culture was not the only culture," stated President Marc Gallagher. One particular event that the International Club sponsored was the selling of muffins and Danish during finals. This was a seemingly disastrous event, for too much food was bought and not enough food sold. The lack of planning also was a factor in the failing, but the situation reversed itself, for dedicated members sold the excess food around school after finals, which allowed the club to break even.

Culture Day was a big success this year for the International Club. Danielle Booth thought of the idea of incorporating a fashion show to the day's festivities, which went over real well with the students. "I really liked the fashion show--it was really entertaining," said Senior Alicia Terrazas.

The African American Club made their mark in the year with the planning of the Kwanza mass. Members put on a demonstration of what Kwanza means and the certain days with the definitions. "The Kwanza mass taught me something that I probably would have never learned in school--it taught me to respect other culture's holidays and festivities. I never knew what Kwanza was about, but now I understand its significance to the African population. It is really a great holiday!" commented Sophomore John Squires.

These clubs, plus many more, made SJND a well-rounded environment.

• Activities Coordinator Herman Gee and Vice President Allen Choi run an International Club meeting in President Marc Gallagher's absence.

• Members of the International Club: A. Ballesteros, L. Yalung, J. Loh, A. Choi, H. Awayan, D. Herrera, H. Gee, T. Flores, J. Terrazas, J. Squires, Ms. Dempsey, J. Crisostomo, J. Calilung, M. Villa, R. Macalino, D. Booth, K. Wright, E. Mistica, M. Ramos, P. Felix, S. Enriquez, V. Hui, G. Toribio, S. Thenard, R. Vasquez.

• The African-American Student Council has been at St. Joe's for many years, giving African Americans an opportunity to get in touch with their culture.

• The Cycling Club is a new club started this year by Mr. McCord. On weekends the cycling club bikes around the Bay Area while getting valuable exercise.

• California Scholarship Federation: L. Kan, M. Lyons, D. Herrera, A. Snider, A. Callahan, A. Dalmacio, R. Macalino, A. Choi, J. Pan, J. Loh, F. Mendoza, C. Kwong, J. Crisostomo, K. Flannery, E. Leitz, A. Obertello, M. Case, V. Schlepp, B. Macias, C. Lacuesta, S. Thenard, C. Ariate, J. Silver, S. deLeon, C. Gacad (Not pictured: M. Biascan, C. Lorenzo, K. Wollenweber, M. Gallagher, M. Bautista).

• Officers of Latinos Club: M. Jaquez, E. Callahan, C. Toscano, I. Ayerra.

• New this year is the Latino Club. They have made a successful start this year with a large number of people in the club, which will bring even more years of success to this club.

Bringing Spirit and Unity to the school, Student Council is leading the pack

It's 4:30 Monday afternoon. Sixteen tired, hungry, or range-visor wearing students are sitting in a room, brainstorming games for the next Spirit Day. After compiling an endless list, including games like Banana Quest, Skin the Snake, and Crab Walk, they narrow the list down to three which they think the students will enjoy.

This is just a taste of what goes on in a Student Council meeting. So, who is Student Council? And what do they do? Well, basically, they're one of the most important groups on campus! These dedicated, hard-working students have come together to work for a common goal-to make student life here at SJND interesting and fun. Because of Student Council, we have great school activities: dances, the famed Spirit Week, formals, lunchtime activities, Spirit Days, and the end-of-the year luau. "School activities are necessary to heighten school spirit and unity", says Sophomore class vice-president Christy Barnard.

It must be fun and easy planning things for the school, huh? Well, it may be fun, but EASY?? Hmm...take a dance for example. Not only does Student Council spend several meetings planning, but at the dance itself, they take turns checking people in, doing refreshments, and taking people's coats. Being on Student Council is like having a job-each officer has several responsibilities and duties. Why do they do it? Why do they take on all this extra work? Freshman class president Ebony Hancock says, "Yeah, it's a lot of hard work, but it makes me feel good that I'm doing something for the school. All the members agreed on the compensation of the hard work they do. Student Body Vice-President Conrado Tapado says, "You know it was worth it when students tell us how they loved the last dance, or how fun the Spirit Day was because it shows that we did a good job and that the students appreciate it."

So is being on Student Council a worthwhile experience? Senior class president Erika Pérez says, "It's a great experience! I've been on Student Council all four years and I've enjoyed every minute of it!"

• Senior class president Erika Pérez, ASB President Cristina Lorenzo and ASB Vice-President Conrado Tapado, excited about the new year, walk frivolously down the street on Orientation Day.

• Over the summer, Student Council went on an exhilarating retreat at Half Moon Bay to freshen up for the new year.

Whether it is knocking the desk over during a test or taking two flights of stairs on the head in front of that gorgeous guy (or gal) from English class, everyone has them—embarrassing moments. They are an unavoidable and unfortunately painful fact of life. People tend to put so much emphasis on looking perfect 99.9% of the time that the other .1% sneaks up on them and makes them look ridiculous. This usually leads to a potential ego-bashing situation.

"One time I was walking down the street talking to my friend and wasn't looking where I was going and I ran into a stop sign pole," says Megan Magelis. Ah, yes, one of the most common moments: running into something or falling. Natalie Carson's experience has probably happened to many, if not all, "I was going to be late for class so I was running across campus and I tripped and fell flat on my face. Everyone of course was laughing, including myself."

Sometimes the most embarrassing situations occur when one tries to impress members of the opposite sex. Ebony Hancock remembers the time when, "I was roller skating at a friend's house and some cute guys started giving us the eye, when I slipped and landed on my butt, really hard." Keith Lydon had a more embarrassing situation, "My friends and I were playing basketball when some girls came to watch. I was going for a 3-pointer, but it bounced off the rim and hit me in the head.

How can one prevent these little faux pas? It is simple: you can't! The best advice is to stand up, brush yourself off, and LAUGH! After all, who wants to be perfect?!

-Edgar A. Guest
Every Junior faced "that thing that couldn't be done," whether it be in assignments, balancing their time, or whatever. However, they were not ready to back down to those who tried to discourage them. The persistence proved successful as the year went by.

The hard work paid off, as the trite but true saying goes, as the future looked brighter and as they began to find their personal niche. In the end it appeared as if they had done the one-time impossible thing-and they were ready to accept the title of "Seniors." They were, and are, the great Class of 1994.

Well, the end of your last year of high school is finally over, and now is the time to think about all of the people you have been in school with the last four years. The people whose bodies made you tingle, and whose smile made you smile too. The people who's eyes twinkled, who never got PMS, who gave into whatever you said, who changed the most and the least, and the people we will see on the big screen so we can say, "I knew them then." Yes folks, it is the senior bests! The "bests" that you voted for, twice. It is advised that you look at this now, then maybe a year from now, five years from now, and so on, to reflect upon your senior year and all of the memories you will take into "adulthood". So here they are: The senior bests in their full and uncut form (That is except most intriguing which had to be cut since the results couldn't be decided.)

So sit back, relax, and enjoy. (Especially the pictures which were taken by Marc Gallagher and hand developed by Danielle Booth.) Peace, and the "best" be with you • Happy birthday to me!! Senior Alicia Terrazas celebrates her birthday with close friends in Notre Dame Hall. Gaby Garcia, Ermin Mistica, Mrs. Terrazas, and Margie Jaquez are just a few of the well-wishers present who presented presents.

Education is the instruction of the intellect in the laws of Nature...and the fashioning of the affections and of the will into an earnest and loving desire to be more in harmony with those laws.

- T.H. Huxley

• At SJND, academics is the bud from which students bloom. From this bud grows the intellect and ability to face human problems and tackle them. As shown by Makiba Valrey and Mr. Holmstead, for the bud to bloom there must be a nurturing source--the teacher.

[procrastination]: the art of putting off what you can do tomorrow till the day after tomorrow. Nobody knew this art better than those who ever had a paper due on a certain date and said to themselves, "Well, I know what I am going to write about, so I'll just put it off until I feel like fleshing it out. It will be really easy to do." But, for some reason, when it came to actually sitting down and pounding out the paper, those words that were supposed to come so easily never seemed to flow, much less surface. Hence, that person is up all night, struggling with the English language, making promises that this would never happen again because the next assignment would be completed well before the due date.

Then the next assignment would come and the excuse, "Well, I'll do it later. I don't have time right now," would ease its way out of the mouth, only to get the utterer in an extremely frustrating situation come due date eve.

Did any of this seem vaguely familiar? Junior Mark Lacuesta remembered the time he left his research paper, the researching and all, till the last minute, literally. "I got stuck in detention the day before it was due and I pleaded with Ms. Abrami to let me go early because I hadn't started the paper yet," he commented. "All she did was lecture me, so I dropped the discussion. Once I got home, I had my after school snack, watched my after school shows, took a nap, then proceeded to think about the paper. Consequently, I was up all night and morning scribbling out fact after opinion after nonsense. I was really drained."

ulcers are often due to [procrastination]

102 But procrastination was not limited to just papers and reports, for this state of mind ran rampant in all activities.

Senior Tatiana Ortega talked about her experience with the school play, "I just kept saying to myself, 'These lines will be easy to memorize. It'll only take a day or so.' Boy was I wrong! The week before Opening Night I was a nervous wreck, trying to get my lines down, which was definitely not a picnic."

Because it is human nature to look for the easiest way out of things, one should not feel bad or rank for procrastinating—guilty yes, lousy no. Everyone had gone through it at one time or another, and some much more often than others, but in the time of desperation this may not have seemed like much of a consolation (by the way, this story was written around midnight, three days after the deadline).

b y m a r c g a l l a g h e r

- Clenching her fists, Senior Tatiana Ortega stresses over her drafting assignment that she left for the last minute.

• Biting his pen, Soph Jermaine Wilson carefully tries to put all the steps of photosynthesis together in his notes during the last ten minutes of lunch.

“ I hated myself for procrastinating-- it made me feel so yucky the next morning. I know in college all my work will be done way before the deadline, for I do not want to have to deal with this stuff anymore. ”

-Dana Herrera, Senior

• Sophomores Likaya Green and Stephanie Gilmore secretly wish that they have finished their homework last night rather than at lunch time.

• Soph Noreen Dizon quickly tries to finish her homework before M. DePrez calls the class to order and collects the work to be handed in.

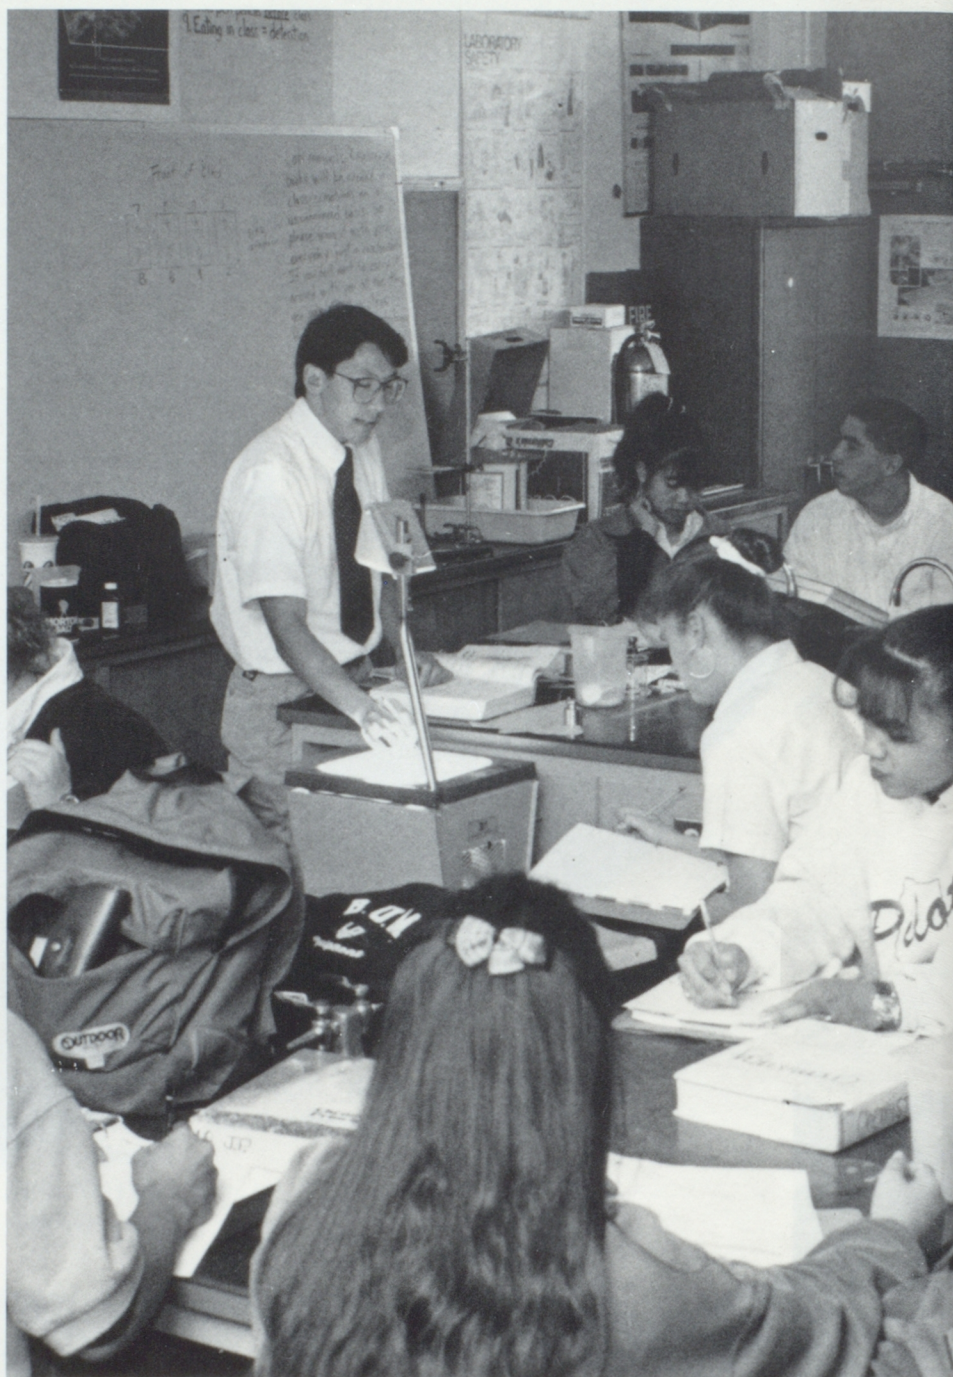

• Sophomores Michelle Pardo and Nelly Baranyi strenuously cram for Mr. Hooke's killer exam next period.

• Taking notes on protons and neutrons are the Honors Chemistry students. The Honors class must put forth extra effort, and the book is even much more difficult.

“ Although Honors classes are much more demanding, I frequently find myself only working for the grade rather than working for the education. My experiences, however, have enabled me to challenge myself and really learn.”

-Joe Pan, Junior

• Preparing for the AP Spanish exam are Seniors Marc Gallagher and Teresa Flores. Part of the examination is speaking into a recorder, which is what they are doing.

• The Honors Geometry class is quite a challenge, as seen through Soph Amanda Snider, who is putting in extra time after school to understand a problem.

• Discussion is a major part of the Honors English II class. This gives students a chance to learn from other students as they explore the world of literature.

[honors]: When you are on your honor, you pledge to do your best. The aim of honors students has been to learn to challenge their minds and "suck out the marrow" (Thoreau) of English, Math, Science, and Language. The honors course students had to pledge to themselves that they would do their best and never fall back on Cliffs Notes. Sophomore Christie Bernard stated, "When you are on your honor there is a certain push towards doing your best that is very important because it keeps you working even harder."

Honors courses were an intricate part of the rich curriculum for there were many opportunities for eager students to challenge themselves. As Senior Honors English IV student Cristina Lorenzo said, "It is challenging... honors courses really make you think. It takes a lot of hard work and dedication, but I think it is worth it at the end."

Honors courses do not put their emphasis on quantity of work, however. Ms. Micheli, Honors English IV A.P. instructor said, "what is important is the quality of the work the students contribute to the class discussions and the quality of work they do on paper. It's quality, not quantity." Sophomore Barbara Macias remembered that when she first entered an honors course, "I expected to do much more work, like long reading assignments and something like five papers a week. Then you learn that it is much more important to write something strong, to the point, and short rather than something long and verbose."

There was higher expectations in honors courses; students were encouraged to go deeper in their analysis of work. Senior Monika

Students are on their [honor] to do their best

Idzkowska remembered that last year's Honors Chemistry book was, "very complicated and the style was much more advanced, which made it go into much more detail."

Students were so successful in the honors courses that when it came time to take the AP exams, they were a breeze. The AP Spanish program was one to boast about. Señora Norris said, "We've had our own back-to-back championships. We slam-dunked the College Board A.P. tests in 1990 & '91 with 100% of the students passing each time. Our current passing average is 95%; that's awesome!"

Honors courses were unfortunately inaccessible to some students this year because of scheduling problems. Honors English III, for example, was very small this year because Juniors had to choose between English and Honors US History, which divided the average number of students in each class by half.

Enthusiasm was another key ingredient to the success of the honors student. Ms. Micheli said, "I think the honors classes are exciting because of the enthusiasm the students have for the material. The classes are also generally more relaxed because we focus more on class discussion. This way we can explore more concepts and ideas together. Things are always new to me because I learn too--through the students."

b y e r i k a p e r e z

• Lab partners Charisse Lacuesta and Stephanie Gilmour, Sophomores, compare lab data in Honors Biology as part of their lab report.

[anxiety]: uneasiness, or in some cases, extreme fear of an event (i.e. test anxiety: the apprehension felt by high school students when faced with the prospect of taking an exam. Symptoms include twitching of the eyes, clammy hands, tapping of fingers on desktops, shaking of one leg, a dazed look on the face, pencil-breaking, and /or pen-biting.)

Test, quiz, exam, midterm, final--these are the words that students dread to hear pass from a teacher's lips. With the uttering of these word came the need to study and worst of all-- test anxiety.

Pre-test jitters were most adequately described by Sophomore Erin Callahan who said that, "Waiting for the test day to come around is the worst. When it finally arrives you're afraid that you'll forget everything you studied about." Junior Allan Cayanen contends that "It's worse when you're right in the middle of an exam and you get to an entire section you didn't ever know was going to be on there. That's when it's time to hit the panic button." Still, some students believe that the most stressful period is the wait while the teachers grade the papers. "I hate having to wonder and guess at what my grade is going to be," laments Senior Eric Nakpil. "I'm never quite sure if it's going to be higher or lower than I expect."

Students became overwhelmed at the idea of having to study almost five months worth of school work over again. Freshman Jaime Masamori exclaimed "I wasn't prepared to sit in a class room for an hour and a half and be tested on things all the way from the beginning of the year. It was a new thing for me." One anonymous Senior stated stifling [anxiety] is the hardest part of testing

"After four years of taking these things, I still wasn't ready for them!" It became apparent all around campus that it was time for semester exams.

Although semester exams were guaranteed to bring stress levels through the roof, they were nothing compared to the morning prior to taking the SAT's. In testing rooms everywhere the tension could be felt. While these students knew that these tests were important, they were hardly excited.

"Getting up at six o'clock in the morning to take a test that will determine my entire college career is not my idea of fun," stated Senior Marc Gallagher.

Exam anxiety struck all the divisions but the students learned various ways to cope. Senior Ermin Mistica recommended meditation. "I learned this great technique last year in religion class. What you do is sit down and relax by listening to your breathing. I know it sounds crazy but it works."

"I just go right in there and take the test. I've learned to trust my basic instincts and be confident," said Senior Teresa Flores.

Students may have had their own styles of coping but perhaps the best way to avoid this madness was simply to be prepared. Taking the extra time to learn the material and begin to prepare for the exam the day the teacher announced it certainly eased apprehension.

• The sweat can be seen rolling off this sophomore's forehead as he concentrates on his English semester final while hoping he will not forget anything.

• Sophomore Rosalina Cautiverio copies notes she has missed while absent. Normally a very organized person, she knows that these notes can appear on a test.

• Ethan Prouhet, James Tham, Matt Reynolds, and Gordon Mihok have a different view of how to do homework, or maybe they are just taking a break.

“ I really don't think that homework is all that necessary to the educational process because almost all the time it is just busy work. Maybe if it were actually stimulating I would have a different outlook. ”

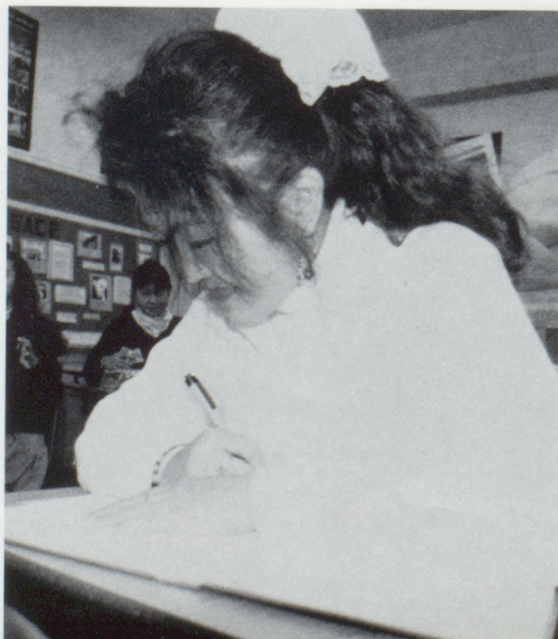

-Ryan Haw, Freshman

• Dutifully following their teachers' instructions on what work to do, these Sophomore girls agonize over their homework and find that working in groups is easier

• Junior Sharine Thenard struggles to finish up her Precalculus homework before Mr. Thiel calls on her to go to the board to present it to the class.

• Senior Samantha Giron discusses important issues like the environment, politics, and AIDS with a friend during lunch.

[homework]: A clever way that teachers use to keep students from watching "Murphy Brown" and "90210" at home. For SJND, was it any more than just work assigned to hamper the social lives of the students? Many students thought so, but no matter how strongly they protested, homework was that necessary annoyance imposed on them by teachers who knew how to teach the material at hand.

What was homework for, anyway? After spending up to six hours or more at school, the last thing most kids wanted to do was more work. For many students inundated with after school responsibilities, homework seemed even more impossible to do. However, just like death and taxes, it was something that could just not be avoided. Day after day, teachers heard creative excuses and/or desperation attempts for not being able to turn something in. Played-out expressions like, "My dog ate it," did not cut it with the teachers. Even plea bargaining, or the process of telling the teacher why the work was so unfair, hard, meaningless, etc., hardly ever worked.

Although non-academic minded pupils sprinkled the campus, the majority saw the importance of doing the work, not just because something might be learned from it, but because many teachers grade, collect, or assign points for the amount done. Senior Cindy Finnell commented, "Doing your homework not only gets you ready for the class discussion the next day, but it also gets you the easy A needed to boost up your grade after that F you got on the last test." Obviously somebody knew the system.

What is the point of [homework] anyway?

Senior Dan Edington had a quite different view on the subject. He said, "Teachers give us homework to make our lives as miserable as possible and made sure that we do not have too much fun in school. Also, they want us to think about them over the weekend and heaven forbid that we actually enjoy ourselves." Could he be bitter?

Because this is a college-prep high school, the teachers obviously knew that homework is a large part of college and therefore it must be included in the school's curriculum. "I give homework to reinforce the day's lesson because I know that sometimes students tend to zone out during class," stated Mr. Travers. Indeed, differences in opinions ran rampant on campus, which made for livelier, more interesting time in school.

When asking for quotes to write this story, the reply, "How can I give you a quote on something that I don't do?" came up quite frequently. But this may have been a front because most know how much is too much.

or many students the word "faculty" may ignite the thoughts: detention, grades, and homework, but for the SJND students this word enkindles deeper and more personal thoughts- dedication, caring, and "rearers of thought".

At SJND, students were not only familiar with their faculty on a student-teacher level, but also on a more personal level. The faculty put high expectations on students, but that is what prompted the students to "shoot higher". The faculty went further and exhorted students to reach a further level of accomplishment: a level of maximum personal growth. As said by frosh Efrain Perez, "I've only been at St. Joe's for a year, but I've noticed how much the teachers want you to do your best. The special thing is that they care about our inner-growth as well."

Losing is only the first step toward victory, as was the case for the 1993 Cross Country Team. With a new flock of freshmen to revitalize an absent team spirit, the Pilots had enough runners to compete in the league meets with a chance for victory. A new coach was also introduced in the new fall season, Mr. Jose Caraballo, also an assistant for the basketball program. But the win they dreamed about would not come quickly as they soon found out. Led by a group of elite seniors, the main pack of the team were inexperienced underclassmen who lacked the drive to win. The beginning of the season was plagued with loss after loss. But with these came the desire to break the mold. Frustration and fortitude were channeled positively into the highlight of the '92-'93 season, a win on the men's side against island neighbor Encinal High School. Outstanding rookie runners who lead the team into their season will certainly lead the Pilots in X-country in the near future.

combination of power and touch, they made it all the way to the league playoffs. Even though they lost early in the play-offs, every team member improved dramatically, eager for next year's season.

The J.V. players had a big turnout and ended up with a team of 12 players. Novice and veteran players quickly utilized special talents and skills to pummel their competition. The J.V.'s only disadvantage was possessing such a small lineup, but their height was made up for in their quickness and desire to win. Patience and sudden bursts were the keys to winning for the J.V. women.

novice players stepped up a notch to complete the teams' low singles and doubles teams. Rookies; Svetlana L., Natalie S. and Sharine T., showed potential for the years to come playing a number of singles positions during the season. Bruises to Broken Bones

Soccer is SJND's most physical contact sport; a game that requires the power of brute strength with a touch of finesse. Casualties ranging from small bruises, broken bones to bloody noses can plague the mentality of every athlete, affecting his/her performance on the field. Like all contact sports, injuries are actually inevitable in the long run. This was an anxiety that every player conceived. "What type of fears circulate in the minds of these athletes?"

Luckily for the Girl's Varsity Team, a number of the girls have already faced tougher and more threatening competition playing on the Boy's J.V. Team the year before. "Some of the opponents we faced were very physical, but I think that it helped us out in the long run," said Sophomore Jenny Craig. This year the women were able to form their own team and made their debut in a league of their own.

The Boy's J.V. Team completed yet another season with a new coach and reverence to the game. In one of their first matches at Dublin H.S., two opponents collided, one was left with a broken leg. Keith Pineo, the one left standing commented, "I'm glad that wasn't me. Something always flashes through your mind when you run into someone like that." However, through mental and physical training, players were able to leave their worries behind, and triumph over their opponents in glory.

speed and agility to compete at their top levels. Through running, drills, practice, cross-training and even more running, the Men's Varsity Soccer Team was able to strengthen their mental and physical skills required for their successful season. Cross-training seems to be a current trend in society, making its impact in the lives of many SJND students. Junior John Garcia explains, "Personally, I don't think many guys worry about weight and what they eat. But, playing a number of sports brings students together as a team, in a common goal of victory."

"What, no more turkey, ham, roast beef, mashed potatoes, and yams?" exclaimed Frosh Angelo Obertello, "You must be kidding!" Abstaining from those holiday meals are physically impossible for almost every human being. However, while dieting is not the most popular trend among these male athletes, this group of Soccer players definitely tried everything else throughout the season to improve their performance on and off the field.

Keeping in top shape is a must for every athlete no matter what the sport. Soccer players require strength, St. Joseph cheerleaders knew what it took to excel in cheering competitions: practice, practice, and more practice. The songgirls spent many hours in preparation for a routine during the half-time of the men's basketball games.

Cheering was certainly not as easy as it may have seemed to many. First, the music chosen had to be in accordance with the theme of the routine. The steps then had to be mastered. Most importantly dances were to be learned.

Rehearsals were extremely strenuous and tiring, sometimes lasting from two to three hours if a major competition or league game was upcoming. Sophomore Lindsay Ward didn't seem to mind the long hours of rehearsals, saying, "All of the practices and hard work were worth it after completing a great routine."

Many routines were practiced for use during half-time but only a few of these routines were actually chosen to be used during the half-time show. Dance steps were created from the feeling and emotion of the song, chosen among past and present hits.

Finally, after all of the practices and rehearsals, the day of the competition arrived.

All of their hard work was put to the test before a group of judges who seemed to have no patience for any mis-cues or failures on the cheerleaders' part. Once they had completed their routines, the cheerleaders were left to the mercy of the judges.

Cheerleaders spent most of their free-time practicing for a routine that would last from two to three minutes; they deserved our respect. Says Junior Erica Leitz, "This year we had to do everything for ourselves, which also includes the routines. All the work can be tiring, but I felt that it was worth it."

Tomboy? Unisex? Un-feminine? Yea. Right. Anything but. Even after playing an aggressive game of basketball, these women were anything but masculine.

They still had that subtle little way of dogging their opponent who messed up their hair during the last struggle for the ball. Frosh Jennifer Rodrigues explained what her and the girls do after a game, "We get dressed, make sure we look okay, fix our hair, and take care of our faces and everything." Ahhhhhhhh. Tres Feminine.

And there was no doubt team work on the courts. With all their jitters gone, they were able and work as a team to achieve their goals.

Both teams did well as the players got to know each other. “Friends were an important part of team work, especially in basketball. It was not a one-man game. We all depended on each other to succeed,” commented Frosh Nick Lastra. Team work was the most important element in any sport, and required dedication and cooperation. "What happened to the great home games we used to always have?What happened to the huge rivalries and overwhelming crowds at the Oakland Coliseum?" These were just a few of the many questions the varsity basketball team asked one another, as the season started. The new basketball team did not look like the championship teams of '91 and '92. However, as the season quickly progressed, noticeable changes began to take affect. Attitudes, teamwork and effort began to change drastically-for the better. These improvements led to the steady and continual Characterized by long baseline rallies, looping top-spin, and less than booming serves, the Men's Varsity team proved that getting the ball back one more time was more important than being the aggressor.

They were not the tallest team, and did not have the one hundred mile per hour serves. But they did have the tenacity to scramble back and forth, and the patience in waiting for the right moment to strike. At practice, they worked on consistency and depth, which proved successful in many matches. Said Darwin Sayo, "We all worked hard during the summer with various clinics and coaches. That helped everybody return with new vigor and skill." Mr. Fong, the new tennis coach, along with the help of Mrs. Lastra, took the young team and encouraged all to perform at their top level. From turkey to tennis tips, they all came off the season with a better understanding of playing tennis. With great depth in players within the team, competition was fierce for the singles and doubles spots. For the first time in many years, the team was cut to bring forward the best players. Despite confusion at the beginning of the season, Pilot netters finished the remaining season, with just as much spirit and energy.

"Strike 1,2,3, you're out!" The Pilot softball players repeatedly faced fierce competition throughout the season. They quickly hit, ran and scored their way to victories many times. This was the key to every win, the principle of pushing the runners all the way home and score. Although this was sometimes used against them, they understood that the game can change at any moment and pull the other way. The one-two-three punch of a hitting, running, and finally scoring was often practiced before games; to strengthen the players ability to go through the motions and win a game. However it is easier said than done, as the Pilot softball team faced teams with bigger and stronger opponents. Yet time and time again, the girls faced their opponents with positivity and a stronger desire to win. This is something that cannot be matched by the other team. Not only do the players have more heart and determination, they also had nothing to lose when they played powerhouse teams in their league. Veteran players as well as novice enthusiasts worked together to go through the motions, and pave their winding paths to victory.

This year's Saint Joseph Men's Varsity baseball players returned once again as the reigning E.S.A.L. champions. Even though many veterans graduated the year before, there still remained a talented crop of players such as Seniors Joe Nelson, D.J. Oster, and Matt Mills to lead the team to victories once again. Practice began early so the players could be in excellent playing condition for their first league game of the '93 season. "With Joe Nelson on the mound there is no stopping us. We've all played together for a few years and I feel that we can match last year's performance as E.S.A.L.

champions," said Senior Joe Gregory.

Over the years the Pilots have risen from the bottom of the league to be the best in the division. The Varsity squad was in top form for the season's play and even the Junior Varsity team rose to the occasion and won many significant games in league play. The team was determined to match the successful season of the year before. Proven veterans and talented rookies strived to make the season a good one. Throughout the year the Pilots had the pressure of being back-to-back champs. However, they played up to the standards they set for themselves. Commenting on the season D.J. Oster said "In the end, our talent and teamwork proved successful in beating tough opponents in the league."

It • doesn't • matter • how • they • get • to • the • finish • line

They kicked, pulled, and pushed their way through rough water, heading for the finish of the wall. Each swimmers' dedication to attending workouts at Franklin Park helped to establish the bond that held the team together. Practice soon no longer meant work, but fun as well. "The team had a lot of optimism," said Sophomore Colin Branson and "It made it easier to know that we worked well together and had motivation from fellow team members and our coach." Coach, Mr. Russ Blumkin, guided and pushed these athletes to perform.

Similar in situation to the swim team, the track team faced their own problems. But on land, competition was entirely different from propelling through the water.

They jumped, raced, and threw for points. The SJND Track team took their various athletic talents with them as they competed against teams that outnumbered them by what seemed like hundreds. They were at a disadvantage, yet they carried on, with the finish line or distance in mind. On the other hand, what made the season worthwhile were the individual victories. Each athlete went to practices with the intent of winning. Although they had few team victories, they all won reaching when they reached "Point B."

“Even though most teams were bigger than ours, we had one advantage. We were not only a team but friends as well, and that made all the difference.”

The object of golf: to drive a small, hard ball with a set of clubs into a series of holes in as few strokes as possible. Sounds easy enough. That's what most people thought. They thought that golf was a boring game for old retired folks who wore funky plaid pants and went putt-putting down the fairway in electric carts. (Actually, golf was made to amuse peasants from the chores of their short and pathetic lives.) That's why golf was considered the most underrated sport next to ping-pong.

Golf, in fact, was like any other sport including basketball, baseball, and swimming. It called for strength, coordination, and accuracy. However, golf took a special quality called PATIENCE. "Most people couldn't stand golf because it took way too long," replied Senior Eric Nakpil.

Patience was needed when waiting for other people's turns, and hiking long ways past trees and ponds to find sliced balls.

This year's golf team was small yet able to compete competently. The size of the team did not hinder the team spirit as Randy Domagas explained, "We were extremely pumped up to win the ESAL title and even the NCS!" Maybe the size of the team was a good thing because many players had the opportunity to have Coach LaPorte guide them to become great players at a difficult sport. In the end, the team learned a very valuable lesson in working together like a family, and giving each game their all.

Well, what can I say, my little freshman brother. . . but that you have truly added a beautiful ray of happiness to my senior year.

I cannot thank God enough for letting you and I share this year of high school. The talks we had at night about that "pretty girl", or that "cute guy", the times we tried to convince mom to go out, the times we both came home tired from work and had to stay up doing homework; these memories will forever remain in my heart. Efrain, I idolized you so much. Your determination and sense of identity are truly inspirational and worth cloning. Efrain, I feel privileged to have such a fine young man as my brother, (are you sure I wasn't the one adopted?). Thank you for illuminating my life and never forget how proud I am of you. I Love You Pallin- my brother, my friend.

Ermin: Zut Alors! What do we have for homework? I'll call Dana!
Dana's Dad: Hello?
E: Is Dana Home?
D's Dad: I tink she's busy.
E: O.K. I'll Call later
2 Minutes Later
Dana: Ermin?
Ermin: Dana? I haven't talk to you in hecka long!
D: Yeah! Since yesterday!
E: I wanted to know if there was French homework.
D: French? What's that? Does it have something to do with a canary-ary?
E: A what? Guess what I saw today!
D: A thing that goes round and round in a circle?
E: No!
D: How are your birds?
E: They're fine. The finch's baby is white and other grey. So how does that apply to people?
D: I never understood that either. I'm not sure where horses ears are and why rabbits don't have mouths.

E: Uh-huh. You haven't been to the Oakland Zoo, right?
D: No, but I hear no one shovels manure like you.
E: Yup. I shovel dung with the best of them. Remember "Duck! Duck!"
D: Yeah. When is Jurassic Park coming out?
E: June. You know, our technology is sad. All our shuttles are shot down.
D: Kinda like ST:TNG& DS9.
E: Oh! Which reminds me...
D: Headache from thinking?
E: I sense discomfort. My head hurts. Why are all the aliens humanoid?
D: I don't know. Anyway...
E: When is Cath going to give us our videos?
D: We were so coordinated and we knew all our steps so well!
E: Weren't practices fun!
D: I always wanted to play with a furball and Streetfighter! Let's go shopping!

E: O.K.! How much should I bring? 50 cents for parking?
D: I'm not sure. But I want a Dayrunner. Let's go to "the bank" and get some money.
E: Do you have your "card"?
D: Not a problem! Remeber when we went to see Aliens 3, Beauty and the Beast,&Aladdin?
E: Yeah and when you, me, and Skippy went shopping at Mervyn's?
D: Who would have thought us kids who used to play Wonder Woman would turn out like this?
E: Don't forget were going to New Orleans during Spring Break. No one has to know.
Dana, I just got a chill. Do you have that feeling that in another plane of existence that someone is reading this?

D: Nah. We haven't had that traumatic experience yet.
E: Well I just want to say that this has been great. Ever since 1st grade. I don't think we'll convince anyone that we're not related. Freinds forever, K? I have to go, so come visit my ranch!
D: Please leave the tapioca and cheese at home!
Robotech & Dragons Forever!

MASTERPIECE

COLOPHON

The 25th volume of Saint Joseph Notre Dame's Reflections was printed by Taylor Publishing Company, 1550 West Mockingbird Lane, Dallas, Texas 75235. Donna Finidori was our Representative and Amy Overath was our Account Executive in the Dallas plant.

The cover was designed by Marc Gallagher and Joe Pan. Its base material was Oyster 060 in a Handtool grain, with the 650 pt. Times 40% width "S" and 150 pt. Willow "imple" in Burgundy #36, the 24 pt. Helvetica "extraordinarily" reversed out of a Deep Green #23 bar, the spine copy in Birch Midnight Blue #17, and the dots in Antique Gold Foil as its special silkscreens and hot foil applications. Board size was 8 3/8 X 1/4. Endsheets were printed on Oatmeal stock in Deep Green #23 twice due to a spelling mistake on the first run.

The body of the book was printed on 80 lbs. Enamel and Hi-gloss paper. Process colors were used in the Opening, Student Life section, Division, and the Senior pages. Body copy was in 12 pt. Times and captions were in 11 pt. Bookman with a 14 pt. New Century Schoolbook bullet as a leader. Birch, Willow, Zapf Chancery, and Helvetica were also used in different sizes throughout the book as headlines and subheads.

The entire book was created on a Macintosh LC II™ with PageMaker 4.2® and graphics on Adobe Illustrator® and Aldus Freehand®. Output was on a Personal LaserWriter™. Press run was 475 copies sold at $40, then raised to $43 after delivery.

Editor in chief Marc Gallagher used grid columns to design the master layouts for the cover, endsheets, Opening, Student Life masters, Senior Section, Academics masters, Clubs masters, Sports masters, and the Closing. He also did the pages 74-79, 102-103, 108-109, and many ads, among other assignments such as photography. He was the main computer data entry person. Assistant Editor Joe Pan worked on pages 4, 10-11, 36-37, 116-117, 132-133, 180-183, and was a valuable photographer. Erika Perez worked on all Division pages, 110-111, 104-105, and ads. Jim Pan worked on 114-115, 118-119, 120-121, 122-123, 130-131, 134-135, and was a Sports photographer. Business Manager Cathy Gacad did pages 12-13, 18-19, and 144-177 (the ads section). Photo Editor Vicky Schlepp did pages 42-43 and took the majority of the pictures featured in the book. Cristina Lorenzo helped with the Opening, and did pages 44-47 and ads. Aimee Abellar did pages 20-21, helped with page 18, and did page 139. Dana Herrera worked on all Division pages, 96-99, and 106-109. Katherine Wright helped with the Opening and did pages 50-57, 34-35, and 138. Henrydan Awayan and John Eric Sanchez worked on pages 10-11 and 22-27, as well as ads. Danielle Booth did pages 16-17, 28-29, 58-65, 74-79, and 126-127, along with taking and developing many pictures featured. Svetlana Lee worked on page 8-9, 32-33, 50-57, and 128-129. John Squires worked with pages 14-15, 28-29, 58-65, 74-79, and 140-141. Charisse Lacuesta did pages 8-9, 40-41, 66-69, and the Index. Doug Ostertag worked on pages 70-73, 124-125, and 136-137, and was a Sports photographer. Brother Brian Guerrini SSCC was the advisor.

Many thanks to Donna Finadoti, Mr. Anthony Aiello and SJND's Administration, and the staff at the Sierra Yearbook Seminar.

- A goofy-faced President, Secretary/Treasurer, Senior Class President, and Editor-in-Chief adorn Marianist Hall before a deadline.
- Simple sunlight filters through the tress, making the SJND campus the prettiest in Alameda.

Sarcasm With A Smile from the editor

"I've always been interested in people, but I have never liked them." -W. Somerset Maugham.

Oh ye of little faith, where do I begin? For starters, I would like to take this opportunity to accept my rightful praise from all, for this year's yearbook was a vision I have had for the past three years, but every year something goes wrong and I was never able to get things just the way I wanted them (not that this book is exactly what I wanted, for there are the unavoidable flaws and imperfections that come with every publication). It looks good, huh? Shut up, I do not want to hear any of the gripes! See the veins popping out of my forehead? Yearbook did this to me! Everything that could have possibly gone wrong did, like last minute stress attacks, computer crashes, major computer glitches, proof problems (by the way, did we ever get any bluelines?!), endsheet mishaps, communication problems between: me & the staff, me & Bro. Brian, me & the plant, me & Ms. Abrami,..., financial discrepancies, Administration loopholes (the fundraiser and the Long Beach trip), and unyielding teachers on deadline days. What did this all lead to? Well, a job very well done, thank you very much. Coming in almost every weekend, taking the computer home with me, and basically devoting all my free time to this unworthy cause made for an Extraordinary chronicle of the year's events. No matter what went wrong, it looked right.

Now for the part that the staff has been so eagerly awaiting all year for (yeah, right). I have to warn you all: it is dangerous to be sincere unless you are also stupid, so beware. Erika: no hands, "Are you coming in this weekend? I have so much stuff I have to do," & "I don't understand the computer." Good luck in getting away from the P's. I love you! Joe: Don't worry, you can use your theme idea for next year, even though I hate it! Thanx 4 those last-minute sports spreads & for proofing. When, not if, you have questions & problems, use the phone to call me at William & Mary! Jim: Keep your brother in line! Did you ever take the pictures to replace for the Women's Soccer spread? I thought not. Remember the Holy Names girls & Antwon? Catchy: You're my friend. Let's leave 'em in debt! Miscellaneous expenses (lunches-I guess you didn't pass for under 12), more private stuff in your own book. Becky Schlepp: What is up with the picture pile? Will you cut my hair? Tina: This is NOT a democracy! What I say goes. No more typing for you!! Dana: Dreads, massages, Jack's room, the bell tower, the bookstore. What more? Aimee: Can I touch you? Let's rave. Danielle: Standing in the photo place for hours was not fun! Twin Peaks rules, as with Gap and our models. We are truly on the same wavelength. Keep The Wall filled. Oh, here's your fork. Katherine: Write a couple stories & give 'em to me by the end of the day. Figure out what the Cassock was? John Eric: Did you write the fundraiser proposal yet? Sorry about the Spirit Week spreads. I love your car! Henry: Senior Best pillars—Ms. Abrami making us call our parents, paying tuition? John: A-a-a-a-amber Bowls. I loved your sex survey, but I don't think we could have used it. Svetlana: My name is with a "c." I finally got the Club spread done, so leave me alone. Charisse: I hated your publications story (sorry!), but nothing is so good that somebody, somewhere, will not like it! Remember this always. Doug: What's up with your Cheerleading spread? More quotes! More quotes! No picture is so good that it doesn't need a caption, so do it. And finally Mendel: Index anyone? Thanx 4 your help w/ Heart 2 Heart. Speak up if you don't have anything to do!!

To the staff next year: Ha! Ha! Ha! Ha! Ha! Good luck, you'll need it. I'll be off at college, waiting for a chance to prove that money cannot make me happy. Joe, I pass the mighty baton to you. Run with it!!

*"God? Are you there?
Please help me get through this tough year! I know it'll be hard, but I'm ready for the challenge," prays Freshman
Bernardita
Brown. Not only were there difficult times at school, but the rest of the world also struggled to get by. But thanks to Extraordinary people who care about one another, the world has become a Simpler and safer place
to live.
Thank you for everything,
Lord!!*
